FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY AT 30 JUN 2025

Global markets advanced in June, buoyed by easing inflation, falling oil prices, and expectations of interest rate cuts. US equities hit fresh highs as core Personal Consumption Expenditures (PCE) inflation remained contained, reinforcing the prospect of the US Federal Reserve (Fed) easing later this year. Softer consumer spending data and declining bond yields added to the risk-on tone, while technology stocks led gains on robust earnings and AI-driven investment. A de-escalation in Middle East tensions also supported sentiment, with oil prices dropping sharply after a ceasefire between Iran and Israel held. In Europe, investor optimism improved on hopes of fiscal stimulus in Germany and stabilising geopolitical conditions, though growth and inflation data remained mixed. The Bank of England maintained a cautious tone, citing economic slack and sticky inflation. Asian equities also gained, supported by accommodative policy signals from Japan and improved US-China trade dialogue. South African markets were underpinned by stable inflation and a second consecutive primary budget surplus. However, political tensions within the coalition government resurfaced, creating uncertainty around fiscal reform momentum. Overall, the month provided a constructive backdrop for risk assets, though policy and political risks remain key watchpoints. The portfolio outperformed its benchmark and peers during the month, driven by our continued overweight to local assets, which delivered strong returns amid a supportive inflation and fiscal backdrop.
