THE INVESTMENT PROCESS

- As over 90% of companies are purely focused on one region, we initially have a top down asset allocation process to decide on the geographic and sector tilts and that is done with the assistance of our in-house macro team and the Jones Lang LaSalle direct market supply and demand data.
- We check that valuations are not already pricing in our expectations which lead to our geographic and sector tilts.
- We have a focus on quality and tradability. We therefore apply a liquidity screening to eliminate poorly tradeable stocks.
- We research companies that are likely to benefit from long term trends such as the strength of global trade hubs, the growing problem of data obesity, valuable voids and the evolution and modernisation of retail.
- We do our fundamental analysis for each of the companies selected and look at corporate characteristics such as quality of assets, location, active and strong management with well defined strategy, solid balance sheet, scale advantage and resilient earnings.
- We end up with a "Buy" list of stocks in which we have high conviction, and construct a portfolio of around 50 stocks.
- We also have a risk management process, apply various risk controls and have a rigorous "sell" discipline.

FUND MANAGER COMMENTS

Economic and Fund Review:

Heading into the second quarter we saw a raft of political, geopolitical and economic concerns that caused short-term volatility for the fund. As trade war tensions increased investors feared for the stability of the global economy. This led to heightened risk aversion and a decline in bond yield that led to global listed real estate outperforming global equities over the quarter, and narrowing their underperformance for the year.

The strongest market for the quarter was the US helped by attractive valuations after the region's underperformance in the first quarter, lower US 10 year treasury yields and a pickup in mergers and acquisitions. However, US stock selection was our largest detractor (having been the largest contributor in Q1). From a stock specific perspective, despite broadly satisfactory Q1 results, Equinix and Marriott International's comments did not match high investor expectations – our exposure here weighed on performance.

Australia was the only other region to outperform the benchmark during the period as investors anticipated reinvestment into the Australian REIT sector following Unibail-Rodamco's takeover of Westfield. Our stock selection here remained solid thanks to continued strong performance from Goodman Group and better performance from Scentre Group.

Singapore was the weakest region as a number of equity issuances subdued the market. However, the portfolio benefited from our underweight to the region, although stock selection was weak driven by noisy results from City Developments and an equity raise by CapitaLand Commercial to buy a German office.

Elsewhere we saw strong contributions from our stock selection in Europe and Hong Kong. In the former it was driven by our strong German Residential name Deutsche Wohnen, and in the latter by Wharf REIT and Link REIT.

Outlook:

Global listed real estate remains at an attractive discount of around 12% to its underlying net asset value. However, the underlying fundamentals of this unique investment space remain solid, with a gross dividend of around 4% and estimated earnings growth of around 6%.

Though US government bond yields recently peaked at a new high (in mid-May), future expectations remain moderate for the longer run. This is not a troubling outlook for listed real estate, which is well suited to a low yield environment.

Against this backdrop, we maintain that global listed real estate remains a good diversifier for a balanced portfolio. If we see stronger economic data leading to rate increases, this should (in the medium term) lead to accelerating rental growth which in turn would make listed real estate more attractive than bonds. Conversely, if economic data deteriorates and inflationary pressures wane (leading to an easing of rate expectations) then listed real estate could outperform global equities.
